

Department of Psychology in the University of Limerick

Departmental Profile: The Department of Psychology at the University of Limerick offers undergraduate and postgraduate programmes that focus on contemporary social issues and foster curiosity, critical thinking, and compassion in students. Complementing and underpinning these offerings is a research agenda focused on exploring and understanding the key social issues of our times. Key and emerging research themes include social psychology, clinical and health psychology, and experimental psychology. Our department consists of the ‘Centre for Social Issues Research,’ the ‘Social Cognition,’ ‘Groups and Identities,’ ‘Migration and Integration,’ and ‘Study of Anxiety and Health’ research labs.

Department Research Interests:

- Social Psychology
- Clinical and Health Psychology
- Experimental Psychology

Accreditation & Awards: Our undergraduate and MA psychology programmes are accredited by the ‘Psychological Society of Ireland.’ Our department has a strong international theme with our staff and students originating from many countries worldwide. In 2020, our department received the ‘Athena SWAN Bronze Award,’ which recognises and celebrates good practice in promoting gender equality.
